CHOOSING A MOVER

WHO CAN YOU TRUST?

This pamphlet is given to you by a mover who is committed to providing you with a professional move and who is recognized by the Canadian Association of Movers as having met all Certified Canadian Mover Program standards.

The Certified Canadian Mover Program was developed by the Canadian Association of Movers with the assistance of Canada's Office of Consumer Affairs and the Council of Better Business Bureaus.

IS IT TOO GOOD TO BE TRUE?

You are about to turn over all of your household possessions to a mover. Much of the stress that comes with moving can be relieved by hiring the right people. A wrong choice can result in serious costs to you and your family — emotionally and financially.

A scam operator, or rogue, will take advantage of you by offering cut-rate prices, making unrealistic promises, inflating the price on moving day and holding the household possessions for ransom. Scams are becoming more sophisticated. You need to beware of the "criminal enterprise disguised as a moving company," as described by Det. Kevin Hooper, Toronto Police Service to CNEWS, 2010-05-20, "Cops haul in moving-scam suspects".

And worse, there are individuals who set themselves up as move brokers, trolling for you through social media, on-line or by other advertising. They do not have trucks, offices, manpower, warehouses, insurance coverage, or workplace safety certificates (without one, the consumer is liable for worker accidents in their home). Instead, they simply find customers, then broker the business out to anyone who will agree to accept the order.

These con artists take no responsibility for the level of service delivered. Be certain that the company you choose does in fact have the resources to do the job. A few red flags that you should be on the lookout for include:

- Operators with a cell phone number only (no regular business number)
- Operators without a physical address
- Operators who only accept cash (so you can't stop payment)
- Operators who don't pay the tax
- Operators who refuse to come to the home to do a visual survey

If it looks and sounds too good to be true, it is.

Buyer Beware!

Why take the chance? Move with a mover who is a member of the Canadian Association of Movers.

YOUR RESPONSIBILITY

Do your homework! Research prospective moving companies before making your final selection. Ask for estimates from at least three reliable movers in your area and check their references, so that you can evaluate your options and costs. Get all promises in writing. Look for best value — not best price.

Contact CAM and we will recommend a Certified Canadian Mover who will deliver a moving service that is fair in practice and cost, professional, safe and timely. Contact your local Better Business Bureau to obtain a reliability report before hiring.

IT'S YOUR RESPONSIBILITY TO MAKE AN INFORMED CHOICE. IT'S OUR RESPONSIBILITY TO HELP YOU MAKE IT.

OUR COMMITMENT

The Canadian Association of Movers developed the Certified Canadian Mover Program based on its own Code of Ethics, and the Good Practice Guidelines for Canadian Movers and Consumer Checklist developed by Canada's Office of Consumer Affairs and a committee of stakeholders from the moving industry, consumer-rights organizations, business interests, provincial governments and educational institutions.

A Certified Canadian Mover is committed to abiding by our Code of Ethics and Canada's Good Practice Guidelines for Canadian Movers.

Our program will provide you with confidence

- in your choice of mover;
- in the information provided to you; and
- in your mover's professionalism.

OUR CODE OF ETHICS

The members of the Canadian Association of Movers work toward a common goal of fostering high standards of ethical conduct within the Association and throughout the industry and pledge to follow its guide to professional conduct.
